

Fullerton Asia Income Return Fund - Class C (SGD)

February 2024

Investment Objective

The investment objective of the Fund is to generate regular income and long term capital appreciation for investors by investing in equities, fixed income, cash and other permissible investments.

Investment Focus and Approach

The Fund may invest in collective investment schemes and other investment funds (including exchange traded funds ("ETFs")), securities and/or hold cash, in accordance with its investment objective and asset allocation strategy, as we deem appropriate.

We may use FDIs (including, without limitation, treasury, bond or equities futures, interest rate swaps and foreign exchange forwards) for hedging, efficient portfolio management, optimising returns or a combination of all three objectives.

The Fund may also invest in other Authorised Investments.

Market Review

February was an exceptional month for equities. Investors ignored the stubborn CPI inflation data from US and Europe. Instead the market chose to focus on resilient economic data from US and forward earnings guidance particularly from technology sector. In dollars, the S&P500 Index was 5.3% higher, whereas global equities (MSCI AC World Index) posted 4.3% gain.

Although parts of Europe are in a technical recession, this did not deter investors from buying, and MSCI Europe Index ended the month 1.6% higher in dollars. Japanese equities staged a strong run, with MSCI Japan Index returning 3.0% in dollars, ahead of economic recovery after the Bank of Japan kept its easy policy, at the expense of a weaker yen, after the earthquake in Noto. Asian equity indices also saw decent gains for a change, with the MSCI Asia ex-Japan Index up a significant 5.3%, led by MSCI China which was 8.4% stronger in dollars.

The strong economic numbers out of US also led market to reprice the extent of Federal Reserve's monetary policy easing over 2024. The dollar denominated JACI Investment Grade Index slipped -0.3% as carry from credit offset rising rates, whereas the longer duration global bonds (Bloomberg Global Aggregate Index) ended the month -1.3% lower. The Dollar Index was 0.9% higher over the month on higher rates.

Minutes of the Fed's January meeting acknowledged the declining inflation trend but cautioned further reduction in inflation to its targeted 2% could take longer than expected. Meanwhile, the People's Bank of China surprised market with a 25 bps cut, the largest single reduction, to the five-year loan prime rate (LPR). This move is likely aimed at supporting the recovery of the property market and could improve affordability for buyers by lowering mortgage rates.

Faced with headwind from higher rates, spot gold managed to eek out a modest 0.2% gain. Technical factors coupled with expectation of OPEC+ members extending their production cuts lifted Brent crude 2.7%. However, the Bloomberg Commodity Index fell -1.5% on the month on weak performance

Investment Outlook

Resilient US macro data indicates the economy remains robust, and hopes for a soft landing should increase over-time. Another 353,000 jobs were added in January's nonfarm payroll, accompanied by a positive revision to the previous two months' data. Separately, with new orders turning positive, the ISM manufacturing hit a 15-month high. Not surprisingly, stronger economic numbers also translated into an upside surprise on January's inflation, raising fears that the path back to target is likely to be slower. Given the pattern of recent data, slow-down in US growth to trend could be the most likely scenario. In which case, another leg of growth could come from private consumption when the Fed starts its easing cycle later this year.

In China, activities data over the Lunar New Year holiday period strengthened. At the same time, the central government announced a number of supportive initiatives, including the aforementioned cut to 5-year loan prime rate, curbs on short selling, and stock purchases by state-owned investment firms. Whether these initiatives could overturn the weak data remains to be seen. So far we only observed CPI deflation intensified in January on decline in food prices and PPI stayed in negative territory. Weak high-frequency data from property sector remains an ongoing concern.

Geopolitical tensions in the Middle-East and concerns associated with the Russo-Ukraine war can bring about a resurgence in inflation (surging commodity prices), recession (trade wars) and a breakdown of the financial system (confiscation of Russian foreign reserves) compel us to be nimble in managing the Fund.

Investment Strategy

Our assessment that US is transitioning to trend growth, coupled with stable to falling interest rates consistent with Fed's articulated policy guidance, will provide the necessary backdrop for continued positive return on global risk assets. This view is largely unchanged in the last few months. Among developed economies, we retain an overweight in US equities, where corporate growth prospects are clearer.

While easy monetary policy is lifting Japan, challenges in Europe – from high energy prices and stalling growth in a number of countries – will continue to raise doubts. Notwithstanding February's strong rebound in equities, we are underweight China until bolder government initiatives and conviction in underwriting systemic risks faced by the property sector are evident. Our exposure in emerging market is primarily outside of China.

We expect central banks to start cutting interest rates in mid-2024, providing a supportive environment for fixed income. The Fund has taken advantage of higher long end yield the last few weeks to extend duration of its fixed income portfolio. This should cushion the Fund from volatility in equities.

To manage the risk outcomes, diversification – by geography, sector and themes – is key.
