Market Review

Global stock markets showed mixed performance in March, with emerging markets outperforming developed markets. The MSCI All Country World Index fell by 4.4% in dollars, with significant declines in U.S. stocks. Hong Kong and A-shares experienced volatility, while the MSCI China Index recorded a gain of 2.0% in dollars.

In terms of sectors, most categories delivered positive returns in March. Value stocks, which mostly are from traditional industry, are performing particularly well. Notable gains were seen in materials, pharmaceuticals, energy, and telecommunications services, while information technology and real estate sectors experienced significant declines.

On the domestic policy front, the government work report from the Two Sessions emphasized a policy orientation for 2025 focused on "seeking progress while maintaining stability." It stressed the implementation of more proactive macroeconomic policies, including moderately easing monetary policy, reserve requirement ratio cut and interest rate cut when appropriate to ensure ample liquidity. Regarding consumption policies, the "Special Action Plan to Boost Consumption" was implemented, introducing two new consumer loan interest subsidy policies, urging financial institutions to promote consumer finance, and expanding the categories for "replacement" subsidies.

On the international front, the U.S. Federal Reserve's March meeting leaned dovish, with a slowdown in balance sheet reduction starting in April, and a downward revision of growth forecasts alongside an upward adjustment of inflation forecasts, maintaining guidance for two interest rate cuts in 2025. Regarding tariffs, the U.S. imposed tariffs on energy and vehicles from certain countries and will implement reciprocal tariffs starting April 2, necessitating attention to policy implementation.

China's data for January and February showed promising signs, led by consumption recovery and stabilization in real estate. In February, the CPI decreased by 0.7% year-on-year, and the PPI fell by 2.2%, partly due to the early Spring Festival. On the production side, industrial output further accelerated and grew by 5.9% year-on-year. The manufacturing PMI for March was at 50.5, remaining above the threshold.

On the investment front, urban fixed asset investment increased by 4.1% year-on-year, showing further recovery, while real estate investment fell by 9.1%, with the decline narrowing. In terms of trade, exports fell by 3% year-on-year in February, while imports grew by 1.5%, with the export figures affected by seasonal factors from the Spring Festival. New home sales declined by 2.6% year-on-year, with the drop significantly narrowing, and the average price of new homes fell by 5.22%, also showing a reduced decline.

Overall, China's economy shows signs of moderate recovery under a comprehensive policy framework focused on debt reduction and stabilizing real estate. Key focus to monitor going forward will be the recovery of exports and the real estate sector.

Investment Strategy

In terms of investment strategy, we maintain a stock selection approach based on company value, emphasizing cash flow generation capabilities. We are establishing new positions in high-quality companies with stable operations and promising growth prospects, while liquidating positions in companies facing pressure in their core businesses. Overall, we have increased our equity exposures. Looking ahead, we will continue to prioritize a value style in our investment strategy, selectively choosing high-quality companies with strong moats and ample safety margins, striving for better long-term investment returns.
