Market Review

The Asian credit market posted positive returns in September, as reflected by the JP Morgan Asian Credit Index, supported by gains from both US Treasury duration and spread tightening. Both investment grade and high yield bonds delivered gains, with high yield outperforming on the back of more pronounced spread compression.

Across the Atlantic, the US Federal Reserve (Fed) delivered its first rate cut of 2025, lowering the policy rate by 25 basis points as expected. The updated dot plots signalled two additional cuts for the rest of this year but with a wide dispersion of views among policymakers. Chair Powell described the move as a 'risk management' cut rather than the start of a sustained easing cycle, tempering expectations of aggressive follow-through. US Treasury yields were volatile over the month, before the 10-year yield ended September at 4.1%, around 8 basis points lower than end August.

At the country level, the top performers were Sri Lanka, Pakistan, and Malaysia. Returns in Sri Lanka and Pakistan were driven by strong spread tightening, reflecting improved credit sentiment, while Malaysia, with its longer-duration bond profile, benefitted from US Treasury duration gains. By contrast, Korea, Vietnam, and Singapore lagged regional peers. Across sectors, Real Estate, Oil & Gas, and Technology, Media, and Telecommunications (TMT) led performance. Real Estate benefitted primarily from spread tightening, while Oil & Gas and TMT gained mainly from US duration moves given their longer-duration characteristics. In contrast, Industrials, Financials, and Infrastructure were the weakest performers.

Investment Strategy

Global fixed income markets are at an important juncture, with the Federal Reserve (Fed) pivoting toward easing as softening labour data builds the case for rate cuts. For Asia, renewed Fed easing is constructive, giving regional central banks room to lower rates without triggering destabilising outflows, while inflation across the region remains within target ranges. Fiscal policy is also stepping up across parts of Asia, as governments respond to still-sluggish domestic demand with greater fiscal support.

In China, activity data has been lacklustre, with retail sales softening as trade-in subsidies faded, consumer confidence remaining subdued, and fixed asset investment weighed down by anti-involution policies and a weak property sector. That said, year-on-year growth is still tracking close to the 5% target, reducing the urgency for large-scale policy action. Looking forward, further moderation in growth is likely to be met with more targeted fiscal and policy support, including a tactical pause in anti-involution measures, helping to anchor downside risks.

In terms of portfolio positioning, we remain constructive on duration and look for opportunities to extend duration, while recognising the risk that the US Treasury curve could remain steep or steepen further as fiscal concerns and higher term premia keep long-end yields elevated, even as the front end remains anchored by rate expectations. Credit markets should continue to find support from strong demand for yield, manageable new supply, and the absence of major negative catalysts, all within a relatively low-volatility environment. September is also a seasonally active month for bond supply, and we took advantage of the vibrant primary market to deploy capital selectively, including in off-benchmark regions such as Australia, Japan, and Europe. Looking ahead, we expect new issuance activity to quieten in October, which should provide a supportive technical backdrop for credit spreads.
