Market Review

Bond markets in March were dominated by a sharp repricing of inflation risks following the escalation of the US–Israel–Iran conflict, which drove a surge in oil prices and brought stagflation concerns to the forefront. Central bank expectations shifted materially, with markets scaling back prior expectations of rate cuts and, in some cases, repricing towards a more hawkish path. Against this backdrop, US Treasury yields moved significantly higher, with the 10-year yield rising by around 38bps over the month to approximately 4.3%.

Asian credit markets, as represented by the JPM Morgan Asian Credit Index in USD, delivered negative returns over the month, driven primarily by adverse duration-related returns as US Treasury yields moved higher. While coupon income provided some offset, both UST returns and spread returns detracted, with the former being the dominant driver. Within the index, investment grade proved relatively more resilient, with more contained spread widening, while the high yield segment underperformed due to significantly wider spreads.

At the country level, the top performers included Korea, Singapore and China, where returns were comparatively more resilient as tighter or only modestly wider spreads helped cushion the negative impact from higher US Treasury yields. In contrast, the weakest performers were Sri Lanka, Pakistan, Indonesia, and the Philippines where returns were driven sharply lower by significant spread widening, which compounded the drag from negative duration-related returns. Across sectors, a similar pattern was evident, with all sectors impacted by the rise in US Treasury yields, but with varying degrees of spread contribution. Financials, Diversified and Infrastructure were among the better-performing sectors, supported by relatively contained spread widening. In contrast, Real Estate, Oil & Gas and Consumer sectors underperformed, weighed down by more pronounced spread widening.

Investment Strategy

Markets have softened amid rising geopolitical uncertainty, particularly around the Middle East, although credit has remained relatively resilient overall. The key uncertainty lies in the duration of the conflict, as a prolonged disruption could lift inflation expectations through higher energy prices, while also increasing the risk of demand destruction, ultimately weighing on growth. This creates a more nuanced macro-economic backdrop, where the balance between inflation pressures and growth risks is likely to drive market direction.

From a portfolio perspective, we remain focused on capital preservation while retaining the flexibility to respond to evolving market conditions. Duration has been reduced to a modest underweight relative to the benchmark, lowering sensitivity to interest rate volatility. Liquidity has been increased, with higher allocations to cash and equivalents, including T-bills, providing both a buffer against near-term volatility and optionality to deploy into dislocations.

We have trimmed high yield exposure at the margin, while maintaining selective positions in more resilient issuers, balancing attractive running yield with downside risk management. At the same time, we continue to actively rotate within the portfolio, reallocating towards sectors that are more insulated and reducing exposure to more vulnerable areas. This includes scaling back exposure to the Middle East, selectively reducing high yield, and trimming positions in sovereign markets such as the Philippines, which are more sensitive to potential oil supply shocks. Beyond the Middle East, we are also closely monitoring the broader impact on supply chains and energy markets, as any prolonged disruption could affect issuers across regions and sectors. Our credit analysts are actively stress-testing names that may be more vulnerable in a prolonged scenario, with a focus on funding needs and liquidity profiles.

Overall, the portfolio remains well diversified across countries, sectors and issuers, and we maintain a defensive but nimble stance, focused on preserving capital while remaining ready to deploy risk selectively as opportunities arise.
