Market Review

Asian USD credit markets posted positive returns in July, supported by modest spread tightening across both investment grade and high yield segments. This credit spread compression more than offset the drag from higher U.S. Treasury yields, which rose following resilient economic data and hawkish signals from the Federal Reserve. The US Federal Reserve held its policy rate steady at 4.25–4.50%, as widely expected, but Chair Powell delivered a firm message in the post-FOMC press conference, that tempered market expectations for near-term rate cuts. Against such a backdrop, the 2-year US Treasury yield rose 24bps and the 10-year climbed 15bps, closing the month near 4.4%.

High yield bonds outperformed, as spread compression played a more dominant role versus the investment grade peers. Within countries, Pakistan was the standout performer, as its long-term foreign currency debt rating was upgraded by S&P to B-from CCC+. High yield dominated countries such as Sri Lanka, and Mongolia also led in terms of returns. In contrast, the country laggards were Singapore, Korea and China. In sectors, the key leaders were high yield dominated sectors such as consumer, while investment grade dominated sectors such as financials, utilities, and infrastructure lagged.

Investment Strategy

We expect growth moderation in the second half of the year to lend support to US duration, even if inflation proves sticky. The Fed's reaction function remains asymmetrical—more responsive to signs of labour market weakness than to inflation overshoots. However, fiscal concerns and elevated Treasury supply continue to exert upward pressure on term premia, increasing the risk of a steeper US Treasury curve. Against this macro backdrop, markets are navigating an environment shaped more by volatility at the macro level than by micro-driven stress. While policy uncertainty persists, we do not yet see broad signs of financial imbalances or credit stress. Corporate balance sheets remain healthy, and banking system liquidity remains ample.

We remain constructive in the Asian credit markets, where spreads have been broadly stable. This resilience has been underpinned by supportive technicals, manageable supply, and strong investor appetite for income-generating assets. Credit fundamentals remain sound, and in our view, the current environment continues to reward carry-oriented strategies. While we do not anticipate material spread widening absent major shocks, we remain vigilant to systemic tail risks. Tight valuations warrant a selective approach, with a focus on issuers and structures offering a favourable balance of yield, liquidity, and credit stability.

From a portfolio perspective, we maintain an overweight in duration overall but remain cautious on the long end given risks around US fiscal sustainability and term premium repricing. We have taken profits on bonds that have rallied and are actively rotating into areas with stronger relative value. Sector-wise, we continue to favour financials over sovereign or quasi-sovereign risk and retain a deliberate overweight in the high-yield sector to enhance carry, supported by solid market technicals.
