Market Review

Asian USD credit markets delivered a positive performance over the month, according to the JP Morgan Asian Credit Index, with returns largely driven by U.S. Treasury duration gains, while spread returns were modestly negative, reflecting some risk premium adjustment amid evolving macro conditions. Within the Asian credit markets, the investment grade sector posted gains and outperformed the high yield peers, supported by stronger duration sensitivity and stability in higher-quality credits. The high yield segment also generated positive returns but lagged investment grade peers, as spread widening partially offset the benefit from the rally in U.S. Treasuries.

At the country level, performance dispersion was evident. The top-performing markets included Malaysia and Taiwan, where returns were largely driven by US Treasury duration gains, with modestly weaker spread performance supporting overall outcomes. In contrast, the weaker-performing countries included Pakistan, Vietnam and Macau. While these markets still benefited to some extent from the supportive U.S. rates backdrop, spread returns were a bigger drag, as investors demanded higher risk premia for more vulnerable or higher-beta credits.

Sector performance similarly reflected the interaction between US Treasury-driven duration returns and credit spread dynamics. The best-performing sectors were Oil & Gas, Real Estate and Diversified, where strong duration tailwinds were complemented by relatively resilient spread performance. In particular, the real estate sector benefited from tightening spreads, which remained relatively resilient and provided an additional boost to total returns. On the weaker end, Consumer, Metals & Mining and Financials lagged relative peers. Although these sectors also benefited from the rally in U.S. Treasuries, spread returns detracted, indicating more cautious investor sentiment toward cyclical segments.

Investment Strategy

The key focus is on the geopolitical situation in the Middle East which has escalated following significant military developments in late February, raising concerns about broader regional spillovers and potential disruptions to global energy supply. Market attention is largely centred on the Strait of Hormuz, a critical oil transit route, as any sustained disruption could lead to higher energy prices and renewed inflation pressures. While geopolitical shocks historically tend to fade over time, uncertainty around the duration and scope of this episode remains elevated, with the situation evolving rapidly.

From an investment strategy perspective, the portfolio remains modestly overweight duration versus the benchmark. Within the curve, we maintain an overweight in the belly, around the 5-year segment, while remaining underweight the long end (30-year maturities) given the risk of a steeper yield curve. On the credit side, we have reduced high-yield exposure and increased cash holdings, allowing us to keep dry powder to redeploy opportunistically should broader market volatility lead to indiscriminate selling and create more attractive entry points.

Looking ahead, we continue to monitor both downside and upside scenarios. Risks include broader regional escalation, sustained energy supply disruptions, or spillovers into broader financial markets. However, history suggests that geopolitical shocks often normalise once the extent of disruption becomes clearer. If the conflict remains contained and energy flows continue largely uninterrupted, risk premia could gradually retrace and allow markets to refocus on underlying economic fundamentals.

Overall, our stance remains cautiously defensive but not reactive. We are managing near-term volatility while maintaining conviction in core high-quality positions. As visibility improves, we will look to de-risk selectively in more vulnerable sectors such as real estate, while remaining prepared to deploy capital opportunistically should market dislocations create attractive entry points.
