Market Review

Asian US dollar credit markets delivered negative returns over the month, as measured by the JP Morgan Asia Credit Index in USD, which was mostly due to the sharp rise in US Treasury yields. US Treasuries sold off sharply following a 25bp Fed rate hike, stronger economic data and higher oil prices, alongside concerns over inflation and increased US government borrowing. The US Treasury curve bear-flattened, with 2-year and 10-year yields rising 55bps and 53bps respectively, compared with a 39bp increase in the 30-year yield; the 10-year yield reached levels last seen in 2007.

Against this backdrop, investment grade bonds underperformed their high yield counterparts, reflecting their longer duration and greater sensitivity to rising government bond yields. High yield bonds were comparatively resilient, supported by stronger credit spread performance and lower duration. At the country level, Korea, China were among the strongest performers, while the Philippines, Indonesia and Malaysia lagged. Across sectors, corporates outperformed sovereigns and quasi-sovereigns. Within corporates, financials, infrastructure and utilities were among the stronger-performing sectors, whereas oil and gas, Technology, Media and Telecommunications (TMT), and real estate were among the weaker-performing sectors.

Investment Strategy

Looking ahead, we view the Fed's latest rate hike as part of a relatively shallow tightening cycle rather than the start of a prolonged period of rate increases. Further measured tightening should help reinforce policy credibility and anchor inflation expectations, while the US economy remains relatively well positioned to absorb some additional tightening, supported by resilient growth, low unemployment, solid consumer spending and investment, and healthy corporate fundamentals. With markets already pricing a meaningful degree of further tightening, more than our base case, we believe much of the adjustment in yields has already taken place. Should policy expectations move closer to our view, front-end US Treasury yields could decline, providing support to bond returns.

The backdrop in Asia also remains relatively constructive. Regional growth has remained resilient, supported by the global technology and capital expenditure cycle, with continued investment in artificial intelligence underpinning demand for Asian exports. Corporate fundamentals are generally sound, while Asian credit markets continue to benefit from a strong regional investor base and relatively favourable supply technicals. At current yield levels, we believe Asian credits offer attractive income and carry opportunities for investors able to look through near-term interest-rate volatility.

Specifically, we see particularly attractive opportunities in short-dated Asian investment-grade bonds, where all-in yields have risen to historically attractive levels. With the yield differential between investment grade and high yield having narrowed considerably, we believe investment grade currently offers a more compelling risk-reward profile. Within high yield, we remain selective, favouring lower-beta, shorter-duration issuers that offer attractive carry. The Fund's overall short-duration profile should also make it less sensitive to further Fed tightening than longer-duration fixed income strategies.

We continue to use non-USD Asian bonds selectively as a source of diversification. For example, CNH credit provides a tactical complement to USD credit exposure, supported by the relatively stable CGB yields and a more accommodative domestic monetary policy backdrop. This provides useful diversification from US Treasury volatility.
