Market Review

Asian US dollar credit markets delivered negative returns over the month, as measured by the JP Morgan Asia Credit Index (JACI), which was mostly due to the sharp rise in US Treasury yields. Following the Fed's decision to leave policy rates unchanged, short-dated yields initially declined while longer-dated yields rose as markets generally interpreted the decision as delaying rather than eliminating future tightening. Economic data also contributed to volatility during the month, with softer June CPI and PPI releases temporarily pulling yields lower, while hawkish comments from Fed officials, and further oil price gains subsequently pushed yields higher. By month-end, US Treasury yields moved higher, with the yield curve bear steepening. The 2,10 and 30 year Treasury yields rose by 12bps, 27bps and 32bps respectively.

Against this backdrop, investment grade bonds underperformed their high yield counterparts, reflecting their longer duration and greater sensitivity to rising government bond yields. High yield bonds were comparatively resilient, supported by stronger credit spread performance and lower duration. At the country level, Macau, Korea and China were among the strongest performers, while Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines lagged. Across sectors, corporates outperformed sovereigns and quasi-sovereigns. Within corporates, real estate was the standout performer as spreads tightened, whereas oil and gas, Technology, Media, & Telecom (TMT), and metals and mining were among the weaker-performing sectors.

Investment Strategy

Looking ahead, Asian credit markets are likely to navigate a mixed backdrop of resilient external demand and continued geopolitical and rate volatility. The global capital expenditure and AI investment cycles remain supportive of Asian exports and regional growth, while targeted fiscal measures should help cushion domestic demand. At the same time, renewed Middle East tensions and uncertainty around energy supply, including potential disruptions through the Strait of Hormuz, could keep inflation expectations and US interest rates volatile.

Against this backdrop, we remain cautiously constructive on Asian credit. Issuer fundamentals are generally resilient and demand for quality income remains supportive, but relatively tight spreads across several segments leave less scope for broad-based compression. We therefore expect returns to be driven increasingly by carry, income and idiosyncratic opportunities rather than a sustained market-wide rally, reinforcing the importance of security selection.

Portfolio activity has accordingly focused on relative value and disciplined recycling of risk. We took profit on selected recent new issues that performed well, executed relative-value switches and reduced positions where valuations had become less compelling. We also trimmed overall high yield exposure modestly to preserve capacity to take advantage of better entry opportunities, particularly if heavy US hyperscaler issuance leads to supply indigestion and broader credit spread widening.
