Market Review

Global stock markets performed well in May, with a decrease in market volatility. Both Hong Kong and A-shares recorded positive returns, with the MSCI China Index rising by 3.9% in dollars, lower than the MSCI Global Index's 6.0% in dollars and the MSCI Emerging Markets Index's 4.3% in dollars.

In terms of sectors, the majority achieved positive returns in May, with energy, finance, healthcare, telecommunications, and industrial sectors leading the gains. The real estate sector experienced a significant pullback, while the information technology index saw a slight decline.

From a domestic policy perspective, on May 7, a press conference was held by the State Council, attended by leaders from various regulatory bodies. The central bank maintained a moderately loose monetary policy, announcing RRR cuts and interest rate reductions, lowering the reserve requirement ratio by 0.5 percentage points and the policy interest rate by 0.1 percentage points to inject liquidity into the market. The Financial Regulatory Bureau proposed further expanding the pilot scope for long-term investment of insurance funds to introduce incremental capital into the market. The China Securities Regulatory Commission suggested facilitating the entry of medium- to long-term funds into the market and assisting listed companies significantly impacted by tariff policies.

On the international policy front, a joint U.S.-China statement on May 12 announced a reduction of tariffs imposed since April 2 from 125% to 34%, with 24% of the tariffs deferred for 90 days, indicating a trend towards easing tariff tensions. The Federal Reserve held interest rates steady but maintained a hawkish stance, highlighting the need to monitor future tariff policy changes and economic data.

In May, China's macro data, particularly in real estate, showed a decline. The April CPI turned negative at -0.1%, and the PPI fell by 2.7%, with declines widening compared to March. On the production side, the manufacturing PMI for May reached 49.5, falling below the growth threshold, while industrial output grew by 6.1% year-on-year. Cement and electricity production declined by 5.3% and grew by 0.9%, respectively, indicating a slowdown in industrial recovery.

From investment perspective, fixed asset investment grew by 4.0% year-on-year, infrastructure investment by 5.8%, and real estate investment declined by 10.6%, signaling a slowdown in investment growth. The real estate market remained weak, with the average residential price in 70 cities decreasing by 4.55% year-on-year, although the decline narrowed slightly. New home sales saw a cumulative year-on-year decrease of 3.2%, with the decline further expanding, marking the end of the recovery phase seen earlier in the year. The yield on ten-year bonds rose slightly to 1.70%, while the USD/CNY exchange rate stood at 7.18, with the yuan appreciating slightly.

Investment Strategy

The overall trend of the A-shares has been positive during the past month. On one hand, the central bank's implementation of reserve requirement ratio (RRR) cuts and interest rate reductions has helped stabilize the economy. On the other hand, the easing of Sino-U.S. tariff tensions has provided strong support to the market. As a result, the Shanghai Composite Index rose by 2.09%, while the CSI 300 increased by 1.85%. From a sector perspective, there is significant structural differentiation. Defensive sectors such as environmental protection, pharmaceuticals, national defense, and banking performed well, while the technology growth sector experienced notable pullbacks, with the automotive supply chain, consumer electronics, and robotics seeing larger declines.

We remain committed to stock selection based on company value, emphasizing cash flow generation capabilities. In May, we reduced our holdings and completely exited positions in companies with a high proportion of exports to the U.S. to mitigate potential growth slowdowns due to tariff pressures. At the same time, we increased our stakes in companies that had rebounded to reasonable price levels and those with strong fundamentals. Looking ahead, our investment portfolio will continue to prioritize value style as the core configuration, selectively investing in high-quality companies with solid economic moats and ample safety margins. We will also opportunistically allocate to assets with strong growth potential, aiming for better long-term investment returns.
