Market Review

In February, global stock market performance was mixed. Japanese and South Korean stocks displayed strong performance, while the A-share Shanghai Composite Index also recorded positive returns. However, U.S. and Hong Kong stocks experienced some pullbacks. The MSCI China Index recorded a decline of -0.9%, while the MSCI Global Index rose by 3.0%, and the MSCI Emerging Markets Index increased by 14.9%.

Sector Performance

In sector performance, traditional industries such as materials, energy, and real estate led the gains, with increases of 22.2%, 18.7%, and 10.9%, respectively. Conversely, telecom services and consumer discretionary sectors recorded negative returns, at -12.4% and -3.4%.

Domestic Developments

Domestically, many provinces convened people's congresses, with the average weighted GDP target set at 5%, down from last year's 5.3%. Shanghai announced new housing market policies, easing restrictions on home purchases for non-Shanghai residents, increasing housing fund loan limits, and temporarily exempting personal housing property tax for adult children purchasing their first homes.

International Developments

Internationally, on February 20, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Trump's global tariffs were unconstitutional. Subsequently, Trump imposed a 15% alternative tariff under Section 122, lasting for 150 days. He plans to visit China from March 31 to April 2, marking his first trip to China since taking office, and will be the second meeting between the two heads of state following their meeting at the APEC summit in Busan last October.

Geopolitical Tensions

Geopolitically, tensions between the U.S. and Iran have escalated, resulting in large-scale military conflicts in the Middle East. Currently, Iran's Supreme Leader Khamenei has reportedly been killed in airstrikes, but the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps continues to resist and has blocked the Strait of Hormuz. Additionally, Japan's ruling party achieved a landslide victory in the House of Representatives elections, securing more than two-thirds of the seats, which is expected to facilitate policy implementation by Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi.

Economic Data

Regarding economic data, the National Bureau of Statistics will not disclose January's economic indicators separately but will release combined data for January and February in early March. January's CPI year-on-year dropped from 0.8% to 0.2%, primarily impacted by the timing of the Spring Festival. The month of the Spring Festival often leads to higher CPI comparisons; this year's festival was in February, while last year's was in January, resulting in January's food and service prices falling compared to the high base and low increment from the previous year. In January, the manufacturing PMI dropped 0.8 percentage points month-on-month to 49.3%, below market expectations. The non-manufacturing business activity index fell 0.8 percentage points to 49.4%, while the composite PMI decreased by 0.9 percentage points to 49.8%, reflecting a return to contraction territory. Seasonal factors may significantly impact the data, but beyond seasonality, demand remains weaker than supply, with the gap between the two widening.

Investment Strategy

The A-shares have oscillated and strengthened over the past month. Domestically, there have been fewer events during the Spring Festival, and after the holiday, Shanghai introduced new real estate policies, highlighting clear measures to stabilize the property market. On the international front, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Trump's global tariffs were unconstitutional, but Trump subsequently imposed a 15% substitute tariff under Section 122. The escalation of conflict between Israel and Iran has led to large-scale military confrontations in the Middle East, increasing global market risk appetite.

Steel, building materials, machinery, and military industries have outperformed the market, while media, retail, and non-banking sectors have declined.

Regarding investment strategies, we continue to select stocks from a company value perspective, emphasizing their cash flow generation capability. We carefully allocate quality companies across various industries and adjust positions based on changes in fundamental conditions. Looking ahead, our investment portfolio will still prioritize a value style as the core configuration, selecting high-quality companies with strong moats and sufficient safety margins, while also strategically incorporating assets with outstanding growth attributes. Our goal is to achieve better long-term investment returns.
