Fullerton Lux Funds - Flexible Credit Income - Class A-1 (USD) Dist

September 2026

Investment Objective

The investment objective of the Fund is to generate long term capital appreciation for investors.

Investment Focus and Approach

The Investment Manager seeks to achieve the objective of the Fund by investing primarily in investment grade, unrated or rated non-investment grade fixed income or debt securities, including convertibles, denominated primarily in USD and Asian currencies and primarily issued by companies, governments, quasi-governments, government agencies or supranationals in the Asian region. The Asian countries may include but are not limited to China (including Hong Kong SAR and Taiwan), South Korea, India, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia, the Philippines and Vietnam.

The Investment Manager seeks to achieve the investment objective of the Fund by a combination of top down macro-economic research for effective duration or interest rate management, country and sector allocation, alongside bottom-up analysis for credit selection and yield curve positioning. Additionally, the Investment Manager's approach incorporates currency flexibility to enhance the overall strategy, complementing both duration and credit management efforts. The Investment Manager believes that this combined top down and bottom-up investment approach provides the best opportunities for achieving superior risk-adjusted returns over the long term.

Market Review

Asian US dollar credit markets delivered negative returns over the month, as measured by the JP Morgan Asia Credit Index in USD, which was mostly due to the sharp rise in US Treasury yields. US Treasuries sold off sharply following a 25bp Fed rate hike, stronger economic data and higher oil prices, alongside concerns over inflation and increased US government borrowing. The US Treasury curve bear-flattened, with 2-year and 10-year yields rising 55bps and 53bps respectively, compared with a 39bp increase in the 30-year yield; the 10-year yield reached levels last seen in 2007.

Against this backdrop, investment grade bonds underperformed their high yield counterparts, reflecting their longer duration and greater sensitivity to rising government bond yields. High yield bonds were comparatively resilient, supported by stronger credit spread performance and lower duration. At the country level, Korea, China were among the strongest performers, while the Philippines, Indonesia and Malaysia lagged. Across sectors, corporates outperformed sovereigns and quasi-sovereigns. Within corporates, financials, infrastructure and utilities were among the stronger-performing sectors, whereas oil and gas, Technology, Media and Telecommunications (TMT), and real estate were among the weaker-performing sectors.

Investment Strategy

In the near term, we expect market volatility to remain elevated as investors navigate persistent inflationary pressures, geopolitical uncertainty and concerns around US fiscal dynamics. Inflation expectations remain sensitive to developments around the Strait of Hormuz and energy prices, while higher US fiscal deficits and elevated term premia could continue to exert upward pressure on longer-dated US Treasury yields.

At the same time, the US economy remains relatively well positioned to absorb some additional policy tightening. Growth remains resilient, unemployment is low, corporate interest burdens remain manageable, and investment and consumer spending continue to hold up. Robust productivity growth is also supporting corporate earnings, while longer-term market-based inflation expectations remain relatively contained. Together, these factors should reduce the risk that a limited amount of further tightening translates into significant stress for the broader economy or credit markets.

Against this backdrop, we expect the Fed's tightening cycle to remain relatively shallow. Further measured tightening should help reinforce the Fed's policy credibility and anchor inflation expectations, which should ultimately provide a stronger anchor for longer-term yields. However, given the near-term risks from energy prices, fiscal deficits and term premia, we remain cautious on duration in the near term, particularly at the ultra-long end of the curve. Over a 12-month horizon, we are more constructive as higher starting yields provide greater income and return potential.

Within credit markets, the backdrop remains broadly supportive, underpinned by healthy corporate balance sheets and sound credit fundamentals. Attractive all-in yields should also provide a meaningful cushion against near-term interest-rate volatility. Periods of heavier supply, including from US hyperscalers, could create bouts of market volatility, but may also provide attractive entry points into fundamentally strong issuers. Elsewhere, we continue to selectively hold EM currencies to capture attractive carry opportunities. Overall, our strategy remains focused on generating carry and identifying relative-value opportunities, while maintaining sufficient liquidity and flexibility to selectively add risk as valuations become more compelling.
