Market Review

Asian USD credit markets posted positive returns in July, supported by modest spread tightening across both investment grade and high yield segments. This credit spread compression more than offset the drag from higher U.S. Treasury yields, which rose following resilient economic data and hawkish signals from the Federal Reserve. The US Federal Reserve held its policy rate steady at 4.25–4.50%, as widely expected, but Chair Powell delivered a firm message in the post-FOMC press conference, that tempered market expectations for near-term rate cuts. Against such a backdrop, the 2-year US Treasury yield rose 24bps and the 10-year climbed 15bps, closing the month near 4.4%.

High yield bonds outperformed, as spread compression played a more dominant role versus the investment grade peers. Within countries, Pakistan was the standout performer, as its long-term foreign currency debt rating was upgraded by S&P to B-from CCC+. High yield dominated countries such as Sri Lanka, and Mongolia also led in terms of returns. In contrast, the country laggards were Singapore, Korea and China. In sectors, the key leaders were high yield dominated sectors such as consumer, while investment grade dominated sectors such as financials, utilities, and infrastructure lagged.

Investment Strategy

We expect growth in the US to moderate in the second half of the year, which should be supportive of US duration, even if inflation remains sticky. The Federal Reserve is likely to focus more on signs of weakening in the labour market than on temporary overshoots in inflation. However, concerns around rising fiscal deficits and elevated Treasury supply may keep long-term yields under pressure, increasing the risk of a steeper US Treasury curve. While markets are grappling with macro uncertainty, we do not see broad signs of financial stress. Corporate balance sheets remain healthy and banking system liquidity is still ample.

In this environment, we are positioning the portfolio more cautiously. Some segments, such as high yield credit, have performed well this year and are now looking less attractive in terms of valuation. We have taken profits on bonds that have rallied and are rotating into areas with stronger relative value. We are also gradually building a cash buffer to provide flexibility should market volatility rise in the coming months. Key risks include uncertainty over the Fed's next rate decision in September, whether recent soft economic data proves temporary, and potential inflationary effects from new trade tariffs.

Despite these risks, we remain constructive on the broader credit market. Investor demand for income remains strong, bond supply is manageable, and credit spreads have been stable. That said, current tight valuations call for a more selective approach. We continue to focus on issuers and structures that offer a good balance of yield, liquidity, and credit quality, positioning the fund to weather short-term volatility while capturing attractive income opportunities.
